The Community Ministries International executive board will provide some oversight and contact, but it is required of each CMI worker that he or she recruit an accountability group of at least 3 persons to whom you can report regularly on your ministry and life.

Under CMI, you are considered a self-employed, "independent contractor" serving the Lord in ministry. The Executive Board meets quarterly and requires a brief written statement be submitted to the whole board with regard to your activities, needs, and goals. A periodic newsletter may serve to meet this requirement. An annual report of ministry income and expenses is also required.
